Introductory sections describe the history of botanical recording, Hertfordshire's physical make up – geology, soils, climate and hydrology, the history of our natural landscape; our wild plant habitats, their ecology and changing flora; and a brief discussion of alien plants in Hertfordshire.

The species accounts include English and scientific names, first dates recorded, distribution maps by tetrad (for species with more than eight records), analysis of status and changes since the publication of the 1967 Flora by John Dony (including 634 of the 1967 distribution maps for comparison).

Appendices cover a Hertfordshire Plant Red Data List, a selected bibliography and sources, a gazetteer of localities and sites named in the text and a brief guide to places of botanical interest open to the public.
